My Mommy, I've just come up to my room from the parlour; I stayed down to dance to-night, instead of coming up to write you right after dinner, as I usually do; for I expected to see Dick for a minute.
In place of seeing him, I had a telephone from Lois saying that he had looked up a wrong train and had to go when I was having dancing at the gym. So I didn't see him again; but it would have been for only a few minutes, probably anyway.

I spent most of the afternoon at Lois' yesterday.
It was pouring rain so we all amused ourselves by playing a guessing game.
One person went out of the room and the others thought of something for him to guess.
Then he came in and asked questions which we had to answer with "yes" or "no".
They gave Dick, the equator, and me, one of the hands of the A. Freeman Palmer Memorial in the chapel. after many questions we guessed.

It is winter as can be out doors to-night. I guess winter has at last arrived.
With love, dearest Mamma, from your little girl
